29 Oct 26

1. The "pure realism" in the TLP is mostly ignored because it is not understood.
2. We know that Wittgenstein read James, and he likely read Mach. He famously read Schopenhauer. His "pure realism" is an improvement on Schopenhauer's residual dualism.
3. I read Magee's book on Wittgenstein, which looks into the Schopenhauer influence. Magee is basically a Kantian dualist. I infer/surmise that Magee was just unaware of the work of Mach, Mill, James. Or, only vaguely aware, and — like so many — "deaf." Dualism is so intensely automatic in the tradition that even serious philosophers can't see around it. Magee, like so many other readers of Wittgenstein, just refuses to believe his eyes. Wittgenstein is terse but unambiguous.
4. I have no interest of course in the supposed authority of the great and wonderful Wittgenstein. Indeed, Wittgenstein is just another phenomenalist.
5. Phenomenalism — never mind the stupid dominant dualist misreadings — is the moment the tradition escaped Cartesian-style dualism.
6. On TPF, the online philosophy forum, posters sometimes don't get my distaste for dualism. Their "blindness" on this issue is part of the bifurcation in question. Nobody lives public sensory "physical" objects like internal icons. But the bifurcated theoretical playtime pose is fundamentally escapist with respect to non-theoretical life. "Philosophy" becomes the label for a dorky game of word math that has nothing to do with reality.
7. Within this escapist game, language is inverted. "Reality" becomes some distant erotic object.

8. I don't want to spend too much time here on the issue, because my work is not for fucking noobs !
9. Of course I am happy if I save this or that noob from a pointless detour. In that sense, of course my work is noobs. But I do not want to give the impression that I expect much from The Average Reader.
10. I've spent too much time on forums to maintain the fantasy of a universal personality type. For many, the word "philosophy" is the label of quasi-spiritual armchair super-physics — stupor-physics.
11. Ayer's LTL is a great little book, and my "dialogical positivism" can be understood as an update of logical positivism that is more empirical about language. Logical positivism is often still too much of a theo-logical positivism.
12. The mind-matter dualism is mostly overcome in LTL and in the work of Schlick, etc. But the word "logic" tends to conceal a residual dualism, where atemporal essences are still taken tacitly for granted.
13. On TPF, the "Banno" character is a great example of this. On many issues, we agree, but Banno clings to "true" as the name of some deep "property." This is connected to his tacit and perhaps disavowed but dominant mathemagical platonism.
14. If you look up the "The Halting Problem Problem," his response to my concrete approach to mathematics makes this quite vivid. He and his later AP ilk tend to fetishize formal methods (symbolic logic.) These formal methods tend to give their users a sense of hovering over the world like little pretend gods.
15. This AP "language cop" pose does indeed offend me, because it is irrational superstition posing as the opposite of such superstition. It's one more example of "video game boy" emotional un-intelligence. These "video game boys" pretend that dialogue is the trading of labels of atemporal universal essences, so that an absolute science can be performed from one's arm chair. Thinkers like Derrida —because they are empirical and critical — are declared "irrational."

16. Well, Derrida is anti-rationalistic. And anti-logocentric. Pragmatism was/is likewise against the fetishization of merely verbal belief. And — of course — against video-game fantasies of how language "Must" work — for armchair pseudo-science to be possible.

17. On the other hand, pomo types err in the other direction, exaggerating the complexity of communication to the point of performative contradiction.

18. For instance, "Joshs" often dashes off grandiose silly bullshit. Incautious evangelist of The Pomo Truth. Of Father Heidegger and Master Derrida. He runs the risk of being of a low-quality LLM.

19. I don't want to hate on them as people. But I can't help but reject them as philosophers. If I am a curator, then I don't want to hang bad paintings. They are convenient as examples of two failed tendencies.

20. I think Heidegger and Derrida are great — at their best. But my task is to find strong English phrases that curate and intensity the better moments in their work.

21. Those who lack ambition and are satisfied with parroting The In Thing may of course do so. Likewise the retired old AP guy can wallow in the state of the art of a calcified sub-tradition like it is still 1970. I just wish the forum had more to offer. Some of the stronger posters understandably don't stop in that often.

22. Lately I am reconsidering my open and earnest approach as perhaps counter-productive. Exoteric in principle, but esoteric in practice. In other words, one starts with more faith in the sincerity and passion of others. One discovers crystallized personalities running in loops who no longer read anything that might crack their therefore final mask.

23. Let me return to "pure realism" — one of the more beautiful phrasings of my own position. In short, experience is IMMEDIATELY reality-from-POV.
24. Belief is all expectant conduct, not just verbalization.
25. Education is primarily disillusionment — the collision of expectation and further experience — affectively-relevant perception, etc.
26. We have no use for little boy phrases like "objective reality." If we give a fuck about...empirical science.
27. Empirical reality is trivially from-a-POV. So the empirical reality we share is also subjective.. But not internal or a magical ghost stuff in pineal glands.
28. If you think that I should "prove" that world-for-you is not in your pineal gland, then just keep on thinking about that...until you laugh at yourself.
29. The whole "Euclidean" obsession of pseudo-mathematical "proof" in philosophy is little boy video game shenanigans.
30. This utterly life-alienated pretense is embarrassing in retrospect — if one ever escapes it by beginning to be the least bit sincere and self-honest.
31. And yes my work appeals to the self-honesty of my readers and listeners. This involves a leap of faith on my part. I "blindly" and expectantly launch my signs for others sufficiently like myself. I can't prove that you rascals aren't p-zombies. But I don't need to, because I wouldn't bother to prove anything to p-zombies. And I don't prove to myself what I already helplessly believe no matter what.

32. So my approach is anti-radical-skepticism as more little boy video game bullshit. I don't have time for that. Or for the homeless guy who promises me a castle made of cheesecake.